Conclusions and findings by the AACC Secretary General

Iraq is offering a huge potential for companies seeking to build-up and expand their business relations in the country, especially in sectors like energy (including renewables); water supply and treatment; health care; infrastructure (selected projects); education and vocational training; and e-government.

The upcoming elections of the Iraqi parliament in May 2018 will show if apparently constructive measurements initiated by the current government and its Prime Minister Dr. AL ABADI are to be continued. This needs to be considered by the companies that are now starting to build-up their business network with local partners.

In the past, Iraq has made a lot of efforts to find international affiliates and partners in the banking sector in order to simplify financial transactions and LCs for international companies. The AACC will support the process of finding bank institutions in Austria and Europe that are interested in a partnership with Iraqi banks.

The process and specifications for tenders in Iraq have to be defined properly. In this context, the AACC has recommended the Iraqi officials to engage professional consultants to issue tenders with more detailed information and specifications, in order to receive more accurate bids and achieve better performance.
